

A close-up photograph of a high-pressure waterjetting process. A metal nozzle is directed at a large, cylindrical metal component, likely a pipe or valve. The nozzle is emitting a fine mist of water, which is being used to clean or remove material from the surface. The background is dark and out of focus, emphasizing the action of the waterjetting.

HIGH-PRESSURE WATERJETTING

With our custom manufactured stationary high-pressure water jet unit, it is possible to completely clean the inside of tubes and drilling stators, between 1.5" and 10" inside diameter and up to a length of 395".

The adjustable operating pressure of up to 3.000 bar / 43.500 PSI, special nozzle heads, and appropriate jets allow us to fulfil the very high demands and complex requirements of our customers.

Tubes can be cleaned from various linings such as rubber, paint, corrosion, dirt or even concrete. A very important advantage of this process is, that the tube-material is not affected in any way.
